Lindley Gray is an independent fine jewelry artist born in Texas and based in Philadelphia, PA.

Gray studied Jewelry and Metals at Pratt Institute while apprenticing with independent studios Emily Amey, Giles and Brother by Philip Crangi and Alexis Bittar, next designing fashion jewelry for commercial brands like Madewell and Stella and Dot. Pursuing an intrinsic need to make by hand, Gray founded her personal collection in 2012, sharpening her technical craft until relaunching fine under her namesake in 2017.

Using a combination of traditional goldsmithing techniques and lost wax casting, she is inspired by jewelry and textile history, Art Deco design and the integrity of natural precious and semiprecious gems. Her pieces give presence to both solidity and delicacy, with geometric details, pared down silhouettes, a concise color palette and seamless settings meant to last through generations.

“Of all our daily rituals, jewelry is perhaps the most transformative. Adornment asks and reminds us of our values, who we are, to seek our highest selves.”

All pieces feature 100% post-consumer recycled gold and natural, high quality gemstones with ethical origins and applicable GIA certifications. Many gems used within the collections are custom cut, allowing for direct rough sourcing through trusted vendors. Committed to a low impact on the environment, each piece is made to order, using as little chemical and material waste as possible.

RINGS to signify or simply sparkle. Choose from weighty, seamlessly set diamond Fortune Bands, stackable signets or Lindley's modern take on engagement and commitment pieces. Made-to-order in alternative alloys and gemstones. Whole and half sizes 3-14 available.

COLLECTION III is inspired by those few pieces of jewelry in Gray's own history that, over time, have become instant sources of tactile and visual comfort. Pared down details, weighty gold, my favorite question about these pieces yet has been "antique or modern?" Various gem options, including birthstones, individualize and add delicate color.
